

Ana Șerban, Administrația Națională de Meteorologie, București

Characterization of the spring 2008 in Romania

ABSTRACT

The spring of 2008 was characterized by mean temperatures above the normal values in most of the country's areas. Precipitation amounts were larger than the multiannual means, except for the north-west and south of the country, where they were generally normal. Contrasts occurred between winter-specific phenomena and unsettled spells characteristic to the warm season.