

Nicoleta Damian, Institutul de Geografie al Academiei Române, București

The physical infrastructure, a factor of risk for the Danube Delta population

ABSTRACT

An element of the society's technical-material basis, infrastructure is an essential component of rural development, affecting an area's level of civilization. The transport infrastructure is a major indicator for assessing the settlement's socio-economic development chances. Direct access to transport routes, associated with the corresponding technical endowments, facilitates economic activities and people's easy access to the workplace.